Amendments to the FY 2022 Budget Resolution

Last Updated: August 11, 2021

Around 4 am on August 11, the Senate passed the FY 2022 budget resolution (S.Con.Res. 14) on a party-line 50-49 vote.

The budget resolution included reconciliation instructions that will allow Congress to pass major components of the Build Back Better package while bypassing the Jim Crow filibuster in the Senate.

During the budget debate, the Senate considered 47 amendments and adopted 29, but the most important part of the budget resolution—the reconciliation instructions—did not change.

Deficit-Neutral Reserve Funds

All amendments adopted by the Senate added deficit-neutral reserve funds (DNRFs) to the budget resolution or modified an existing DNRF. Deficit-neutral reserve funds have little practical policy impact and in no way obligate lawmakers to advance related legislation.

Creation of a DNRF simply means the Budget Committee can shift the budget levels for program areas to accommodate relevant legislation as long as the legislation does not add to the deficit. (This prevents a possible budget point of order down the road.) In practice, this is almost never applicable. Moreover, most legislation is still subject to potential filibuster (and a 60-vote threshold) in the Senate unless it passes under the budget reconciliation process.

DNRFs should be treated as the equivalent of the Sense of the Senate (i.e., a symbolic statement). Nevertheless, legislators and the press can misleadingly characterize DNRFs as having real policy impact. To provide a counter-message to a DNRF amendment offered by an opponent of the budget resolution, a senator in the majority party sometimes offers a competing DNRF amendment, known as side-by-side amendment.

House Consideration of the Budget Resolution

The House is scheduled to reconvene the evening of August 23 to consider the Senate-passed budget resolution. If the House changes the resolution at all, the resolution has to go back to the Senate, which is in recess until September 13. The budget resolution instructs congressional committees to report their portions of the reconciliation bill by September 15.

The Senate adopted 29 DNRF amendments: 23 by roll call vote and 6 by voice vote.
